

Community Spotlight:

THE GROW FOR CHANGE URBAN FARM

Where is the Grow for Change Urban Farm?

Spot the 148 straw bales turned into a food and pollinator garden at the corner of Brant Street and Ghent Avenue.

(Not currently open to the public).

How can the community support the Urban Farm?

The Grow for Change Urban Farm is seeking volunteers to help in the farm, no farming or garden experience is necessary! To learn more, volunteer or discover sponsorship opportunities, you can inquire at grow4changes@gmail.com or find them on Facebook.

Tell us about the Urban Farm

It all began when The Molinaro Group was looking to find a community group who could temporarily benefit from the land before it was developed – that's where the Grow for Change Urban Farm began! The mission and goal is to grow food for local food charities and promote positive mental health through green spaces and volunteerism. The Grow for Change Urban Farm is a community and private sector partnership project, which is maintained by volunteers.

Who is involved in the project?

The Urban Farm project is led by Adria Cehovin and her Grow for Change volunteers. Temporary land access was provided by the Molinaro Group, as well as most of the start-up resources. Since then various other companies, organizations and the general public have been providing supplies, seeds, seedlings, funding for water and more! The community has really come together to build the Urban Farm collectively.

